> Modules: Module 1 – Communication as a Leadership Competency; Module 2 – Audience-Centred Communication
> Target Audience: Semester 1 MBA Students

1. Assignment Overview & Objectives

In Assignment 3, every student builds and publishes a personal website. For many of you, it will be the first website of your life. It will be your MBA portfolio: who you are, what you are learning, the work you have submitted, and moments from the classroom. It will grow with you across all four semesters.

A website is also a piece of business communication. Recruiters, faculty, classmates and family will read it without you in the room to explain it, so it has to speak for you. Build it using the concepts from Modules 1 and 2:

- Credibility and Ethos: Your site is your online ethos. Show your expertise through real work (your assignments), and show your character through honesty and consistency (Aristotle, Conger).
- Audience-Centred Communication: Ask Barrett's five questions before you design a page: Who are they? What do they know? What do they need? How will they react? What should they do?
- Stakeholders as Audiences: Recruiters are your key players; faculty, classmates and family are other audiences who will also read your site. Write so that every one of them can follow it.
- The Message House: Your Home page needs one umbrella message about yourself, in 15 words or fewer, supported by three pillars (for example, skills, experience and interests).
- The 7 Cs: Every page should be clear, concise, concrete, correct, coherent, complete and courteous.
- Executive Presence Online: Your photographs, tone and design are your appearance, gravitas and communication on the web (Hewlett).

2. Recommended Tools

You may build your site with either tool below. Choose one; if you have time, try both and keep the one you like. Both let you build by dragging and dropping blocks, with no coding.

Tool	Link	Why use it
Google Sites	sites.google.com	Free with your Google account. Quick to learn, works well with Google Drive, Docs, Slides and YouTube, and publishes to a sites.google.com link.
Odoo Website	odoo.com/app/website	A professional website builder with ready-made themes and a built-in blog. Good if you want a more designed look.

You may use AI tools (ChatGPT, Claude, Gemini) and the internet for ideas, layout suggestions and grammar checks. The words, photographs and reflections on your site must be your own. Check every fact and link that AI suggests before you publish it.

3. What Your Website Must Contain

Your site needs the pages below. You may change the page names and add more pages.

Home	Your photograph, name and programme (MBA) and batch, your umbrella message (15 words or fewer), and links to your main pages.	Required
About Me	A 150–250-word profile: education, work experience (if any), skills, interests and career goal. Add your LinkedIn link if you have one.	Required
My MBA Journey: Semesters 1–4	One page or section for each of the four semesters. List all the courses (subjects) in each semester as given in your programme structure. Semester 1 should be filled in now; Semesters 2–4 can say “Coming soon” under each course.	Required
Business Communication (SB5111)	The fully built course page; see Section 4.	Required
Recommended Videos & Lectures	At least five talks or lectures you recommend, each with a link and a one-line takeaway in your own words.	Required
My Blog / Write-ups	A blog or writing section. It must exist; whether you post now is up to you. A short first post is encouraged.	Required (posts optional)
Gallery	Photographs of classroom activities, events, your campus and team work.	Required
Acknowledgements	A note thanking the Professor who helped you open the first website of your life (see Section 5).	Required
Contact	Your college email ID and LinkedIn profile. Do not publish your phone number or home address.	Required

4. The Business Communication Course Page

At the very least, the Business Communication page must be complete. It must include:

- Course overview: the course code, title and objectives, and the five modules: (1) Communication as a Leadership Competency, (2) Audience-Centred Communication and Stakeholder Mapping, (3) Persuasion and Influence, (4) Difficult Conversations and Conflict Communication, (5) Communication in the AI Era.
- All assignments you have submitted: Assignment 1, Assignment 2 (Leadership Communication Analysis: The Steve Jobs Case Study) and this Assignment 3. Upload each one as a PDF, or link to it from Google Drive. Add one line on what you learned from each, and keep adding future assignments.
- Your artefacts: any PPTs, posters, reports, models or other artefacts you have made, with photographs, and links to any other websites you have built.
- Classroom activities: photographs and a short description of activities you took part in, such as Just a Minute (JAM), the group discussion, the debate, the press conference, the 60-second pitch, Table Topics and the Power Word Relay.
- My key learnings: three to five learnings from each module so far, in your own words, with an example from class or from your life.
- My power words: five power words or power sentences from class that you now use, each in a sentence of your own.

Add a personal touch

What makes the site yours is what nobody else could have written. Some ideas:

- A short video introduction (60 seconds, PREP format) embedded on your Home page.
- A "What I am reading or watching" corner. Starter ideas for your list of talks:
  - Simon Sinek, How great leaders inspire action — ted.com
  - Frances Frei, How to build (and rebuild) trust — ted.com
  - Julian Treasure, How to speak so that people want to listen — ted.com
  - Hans Rosling, The best stats you've ever seen — ted.com
  - Steve Jobs, Stanford Commencement Address (2005) — youtube.com
- A blog post idea list: "My first JAM", "What the Steve Jobs videos taught me", "One sentence that lost someone's trust", "Why I chose an MBA".
- Your own colour, fonts and photographs. Keep the design consistent and easy to read.

5. Acknowledgement

It is a professional courtesy to thank those who help you begin something new. Your Acknowledgements page should thank the Professor of Business Communication who encouraged you to open the first website of your life. Keep it sincere and in your own words: two or three sentences are enough.

6. A Website That Grows With You

This is not a one-time assignment. It is the home for everything you create during your MBA, and after it.

- Bring all your work here: Any website you build for another course or project, photographs of your artefacts, your PPTs, reports and videos should all become part of this one website. Keep adding to it in every semester.
- Build for your future self: When you look back after 10 years, you should be proud of what you have built.
- It will grow with you: Your Professor will help you improve the website later, and perhaps help you add your startup and its details to it. The sky is the limit.
- Be honest: Show your real work, your real photographs and what you actually learned. This is experiential learning: you learn by doing, so try, make mistakes and improve.

> Let us start exploring the possibilities.

7. Suggested Plan: Four Days to Launch

When	What to do
Fri, 23 Oct	Choose your tool. Sketch your site map on paper: the pages and what goes on each. Write your umbrella message.
Sat, 24 Oct	Build the pages. Add your photograph, About Me, and the four semester pages with their course lists.
Sun, 25 Oct	Complete the Business Communication page: assignments, activities, photographs, learnings. Add the videos, blog section and Acknowledgements.
Mon, 26 Oct	Proofread with the 7 Cs. Publish. Test the link in a private (incognito) browser window. Post the link on GCR.

8. Submission Guidelines & Evaluation Rubric

Submission Requirements:

- What to submit: The public link to your published website, posted on Google Classroom (GCR) under Assignment 3. Your site may still be a work in progress; it is accepted in whatever form it is in, but it must be submitted.
- Deadline: Monday, 26 October 2026, positively.
- Link check: Open your link in a private (incognito) browser window before you submit. If it asks for a sign-in, your site is not public yet. Fix the sharing or publish settings.
- Naming Convention: Post your link with your name and the assignment number, e.g. “RahulSharma_Assignment3 – https://…”.
- Evaluation: The Professor will open and review every website.

Evaluation Rubric:

Evaluation Criteria	Weight	Performance Expectations & Descriptor
Completeness of Structure	25%	All required pages are present and working: Home, About Me, four semester pages with course lists, Videos, Blog, Gallery, Acknowledgements and Contact.
Business Communication Page	30%	Course overview, all submitted assignments with a learning note each, classroom activities with photographs, key learnings and power words.
Personal Touch & Originality	20%	Your own voice, photographs, recommendations and reflections. The site could only belong to you.
Communication Quality	15%	An umbrella message on the Home page, audience-centred writing, the 7 Cs, a clean and consistent design, and working links.
Professionalism & Courtesy	10%	A public link submitted on time, a sincere acknowledgement, and safe use of personal information and photographs.

9. Online Safety & Etiquette

- Protect yourself: Never publish your phone number, home address, Aadhaar or PAN number, date of birth or bank details.
- Respect others: Ask classmates before you post a photograph in which they can be identified, and remove it if anyone asks.
- Respect copyright: Use your own photographs, or free images (for example from Unsplash or Pexels). Link to videos rather than downloading and re-uploading them.
- Write as a professional: Assume a future employer will read every page. Avoid negative comments about people, the college or companies.
